

MUSEUM of FOOTBALLS

About the Museum

Football is the world's most popular sports, uniting over 4 billion people in powerful emotions. From young and old cheering on their favorite teams from the stands of the world's stadiums or in front of TV screens – to footballing idols celebrating cracking goals on football pitches globally. Football brings us indescribable feeling of joy and excitement.

You are holding the catalogue of the world's first and only Museum of the game's most important, most sacred and irreplaceable artifact – the ball. You cannot imagine football without it, the eyes of billions are fixed on its flight and a ball always has a story to tell – whether that is of a sweet victory or a bitter defeat.

Since 1970s, we have accrued an unprecedented collection of footballs from history's most significant football tournaments, spanning over 1000 items and featuring rare medieval balls, historic balls from UEFA and FIFA Cups from the last 100 years, balls from the Olympic Games, colorful footballs from national and continental leagues from all over the world and many more.

Each ball not only embodies the latest technical developments of its time, but is also a work of art, crafted by famous brands, best artists and designers.

From those kicked about in the medieval times to the ones which flew into the back of the net in FIFA World Cup finals nowadays – the Museum has all those iconic footballs on display, telling the entire history of football through the evolution of the ball.

And each item in this collection is a declaration of our passion to football.

FIFA World Cup

The FIFA World Cup is the main event for all football fans from every corner of the globe. Traditionally, since 1930 it has been held every 4 years. The football tournament held within the Olympics was the predecessor of the World Cup, but due to the rapid development of football it could hardly reach the professional competition status. This is why in 1928 FIFA officially claimed it wanted to hold a world cup in football. The first match was successfully held as early as in 1930 in Uruguay. It lay the foundation of the new era of football.

Tiento and T-Model

Two different balls participated in the final match of the very first World Cup. The national teams of Argentina and Uruguay could not agree on which ball to play for so long that they decided to play the match with two balls. In the first time, we played with a ball that the Argentines liked. It was made in Scotland and called Tiento. And in the second half of the meeting, they played with a shell that the hosts of the tournament liked. This ball was made in England and called the T-Model.

The 1930 World Cup in Uruguay was the first official international championship held by FIFA. All matches were held in the Uruguayan capital, Montevideo, where a stadium for 90,000 spectators was built specifically for the tournament.

The national teams of Uruguay and Argentina met in the final. It is interesting that in the first half, the teams played Tiento ball, which was won by Argentina, and the team of Uruguay was losing 1:2. In the second half, a T-Model ball entered the field, which the host team of the championship liked. Over the next 45 minutes, the Uruguayans scored 3 goals and won the first FIFA World Cup with a score of 4:2.

Federale 102

The official ball of the second FIFA World Cup was Federale 102. In the early thirties, football was played mainly with English balls. But the hosts of the tournament insisted that the main matches of the final tournament be played with Italian-made balls. And they were right. The balls were still laced up then. And on English models, the lacing was stiff, made of leather. This often led to head wounds - many photos from those days show players wearing headbands to avoid injury, but the Italians presented the world with cotton lacing, which was much softer.

The 1934 World Cup was held in Italy. The hosts of the tournament showed incredible zeal to win, which led them to the final. There they met with the Czechoslovak national team. The teams did not have enough 90 minutes to identify the winner. In extra time, 95 minutes into the match, Angelo Schiavio's goal brought the Italians victory. The Italian national team beat Czechoslovakia with a score of 2:1.

Allen

The official ball of the 1938 FIFA World Cup in France was Allen. Back in the twenties, the French played football with a ball of their own production. They also presented it at the World Cup at home. The ball was handmade, brown in color with white lacing.

The third World Cup was held at 10 French stadiums. An interesting situation happened between the national teams of Italy and Brazil in the semifinals. Confident of their success, the Brazilians booked a flight from Marseille to Paris. This made the Italians worried, because the flight was the only one, and there were no more tickets for it. Italian coach Vittorio Pozzo arrived at the Brazilians' hotel and suggested that the team that won would fly. The Brazilians replied that they would fly, but they were ready to take Pozzo with them to watch the final in the French capital.

The Brazilians lost in the semifinals, but they did not sell tickets to their rivals, and the Italian national team had to get to Paris by train, where in the final match they beat the Hungarian national team with a score of 4:2 and became champions.

Duplo T

The official ball of the 1950 FIFA World Cup was named Duplo T. This orange shell became the first official ball without lacing. It was replaced by a valve, which made it possible to give the ball a more regular rounded shape, and the players to avoid unpleasant microtraumas from the cord when in contact with the projectile.

The 1950 Brazilian World Championship was the first post-war championship. It was the first and only tournament in which the champion and prize-winners were determined by a round-robin system. Thus, the decisive match between the national teams of Brazil and Uruguay was not formally considered the final, but traditionally stands on a par with the finals of other World Championships. In this match, the national team of Uruguay beat the national team of Brazil with a score of 2:1. In Brazil, after losing the decisive match, mourning was declared. Uruguay, on the contrary, declared July 16 (match day) a national holiday.

Swiss World Champion

The official ball of the 1954 World Championship was named Swiss World Champion. The ball had two versions: dark yellow and dark brown. Both versions had a name and branding, but such balls could only be played in training. According to FIFA rules, official matches were played with balls without branding.

Swiss World Champion became the first tournament ball consisting of 18 panels. Also, since 1954, FIFA has strictly regulated the size and weight of the ball. Each projectile had to be no more than 70 cm. and not less than 68.6 cm in circumference. And the weight should not exceed 450 grams, and should not be less than 410 grams.

The fifth World Cup was held in Switzerland and involved six cities. The national teams of Germany and Hungary met at the final match in Bern. During the match the Germans were losing 0:2, but managed to seize the initiative and won 3:2. Thus, the German national team became the winner of the World Cup for the first time.

Top Star

The official ball of the 1958 FIFA World Cup was chosen by FIFA representatives among more than a hundred applicants. The Top Star ball won, and its key advantage was 23 rectangular panels, which was more than its competitors. The white, yellow, and light brown versions of the Top Star were used in the tournament.

The sixth World Cup was held in Sweden and hosted 16 national teams who fought for the main trophy. For the first time the whole world could see the World Cup on TV screens, as well as the first time the European Championship was not won by a European team because in the final, the Brazilian national team defeated the Swedish team 5:2.

Mr. CRACK

The official ball of the 1962 FIFA World Cup was named Mr. CRACK. The ball revolutionized the football world. In its manufacture, they refused to use long longitudinal panels, having hexagons insted. Also, a modern valve was used in the ball, which allows better air retention. However, Mr. CRACK has been criticized because in the rain, the ball absorbed a large amount of water and lost its color. The ball was yellow-orange in color, but a white version was also used.

The seventh FIFA World Cup was held in Chile. Matches were to be held in eight cities, but nature has taken its toll: the country was a major earthquake, after which some of the cities were destroyed and, as a result, the championship took only four cities. In the final of the tournament, the Brazilian national team defeated the Czechoslovakia team with a score of 3:1, thus retaining its championship title.

Challenge 4-Star

The official ball of the 1966 World Cup was Challenge 4-Star produced by Slazenger. The ball consisted of 24 rectangular panels turned in different directions. Challenge 4-Star had 3 different colors: white, dark yellow and red-orange. Although the most commonly used version was white.

England was chosen as the host country of the Championship in 1966 in honor of the centenary of the standardization of football in England. The key episode of the whole tournament happened in the final. After an Englishman Jeff Hurst hit the German goal, the ball hit the crossbar and landed on the goal line. The referee of the match was not sure that the goal had taken place and turned to the Soviet linesman Tofik Bahramov, who assured his colleague that the ball was in the goal.

Disputes about the fairness of that decision continue to this day. English fans are confident in the correctness of Bahramov's judgment, and German fans are firmly convinced of his bias. In his memoirs, the referee admitted that he did not see the moment when the ball touched the goal line. The England national team won 4-2 - won its first and so far only World Cup.

Telstar

The official ball of the 1970 FIFA World Cup was named Adidas Telstar. It was named after the first ever private satellite, because the 1970 Championship was broadcast live on television for the first time.

Telstar became the first spotted black-and-white ball, which was very convenient to watch while watching a black-and-white broadcast on TV. This is why the ball was nicknamed «the star of television. 20 balls were provided for the Championship itself, and later more than 600 thousand copies were sold. The ninth FIFA World Cup was held in Mexico for the first time outside Europe and South America. The matches were held in five cities, and the final game was held at the Azteco Stadium in Mexico City. There, the Brazilian national team beat the Italian national team with a score of 4:1.

Telstar Durlast

As at the 1970 World Cup, in 1974 Adidas Telstar became the official ball. The ball is much more moisture-resistant thanks to the special Durlast coating, whose name became the second word in the full name of the new ball - Adidas Telstar Durlast. The design of the Telstar has hardly changed since 1970. Only the text applied to the ball and its font have changed.

In addition to Telstar Durlast, Adidas presented several balls for the 1974 Championship. The all-white Chile Durlast ball, whose design referred to the official ball of the 1962 Chilean World Cup, and the Tricolore elast tricolor, repeating the Telstar design, but adding brightness to it.

The 10th anniversary World Cup was held in Germany and West Berlin. It is noteworthy that doping control was introduced for the first time at this Championship. In the final of the Championship, the teams of Germany and the Netherlands met, where the former won with a score of 1:2. The decisive goal was the only goal in the match scored not on penalties.

Tango Durlast

The official ball of the 1978 World Cup was named after the traditional Argentine dance — Tango Durlast. The creators of the ball drew inspiration from the deep passion, emotions and elegance of Argentina.

This ball has become a «football design classic». The «triads» drawn on hexagonal panels create 12 circles encircling the ball. The ball consists of 32 stitched fragments made of genuine leather and covered with a shiny waterproof coating «Durlast».

Adidas also released several special versions of Tango for the 1978 World Cup. One of them was "Tango River Plate". The name of the La Plata River is associated with ball lines encircling the ball. In 1978, the FIFA World Cup was held in 5 Argentine cities. The national teams of Argentina and the Netherlands played in the final match in the capital of Buenos Aires. 90 minutes of the match ended in a draw, but in extra time the hosts scored two goals and won.

Tango España

The official ball of the 1982 FIFA World Cup in Spain became Tango España. It was already the third version of Tango after 1978 and 1980. Adidas retained the fan-favorite design of previous versions, but significantly improved the technological side of the ball for the Championship.

It was the last genuine leather ball at the World Championships. At the same time durability and water resistance of the ball was improved by using rubberized seams and shiny waterproof coating. In 1982, for the first time in the history of the World Championships, teams shot a penalty shootout to determine the winner at the playoff stage. Another significant event was the 10 goals that the Hungarian national team scored against El Salvador in one match. In the final match, Italy beat Germany 3-1.

Azteca Mexico

At the 1986 World Cup in Mexico, the official ball was named Azteca Mexico. The championship was held in a country with high humidity and low air pressure, which means that the technical characteristics of the projectile were extremely important. Therefore, for the first time, Adidas made the ball not from genuine leather, but from synthetic materials.

The drawing on the hexagonal panels symbolizes the pyramids of the ancient Aztec and Mayan civilization with labyrinths consisting of endless tunnels and passages. The 1986 World Cup was marked by the appearance of such a phenomenon in the stands as the «wave», which was soon popularized around the world – now it is even called the «Mexican wave». The tournament was held in eleven cities and at twelve stadiums. The main time of the final match between the national teams of Germany and Argentina ended in a draw: 2:2. However, in extra time, Argentina managed to win by scoring another goal.

Etrusco Unico

By the 1990 World Cup in Italy, Adidas released a truly elegant ball called Etrusco Unico. It was named in honor of the Etruscans, the creators of the first advanced civilization on the Apennine Peninsula.

Adidas design emphasized stylized ethnic patterns that conveyed the spirit of the indigenous peoples of Italy. And in the center of the hexagonal panels, the designers placed a triad of white Etruscan lions' heads, symbolizing strength and courage.

Adidas also released two versions of the Tango ball, the design of which used ethnic patterns from Etrusco Unico.

The 1990 World Cup is considered one of the most goalless in history. Averaging 2.2 goals scored per game, a record low that still holds, there were also a record 16 red cards at the time, including the first-ever suspension in the finals. Germany defeated Argentina, scoring the only goal on a penalty kick in the 85th minute of the match.

Questra

The official ball of the 2010 World Cup was named Questra. This is an ancient word meaning «striving for the stars.» The name was chosen for a reason: the Championship was held on the 25th anniversary of the Apollo 11 space mission.

The design continued to develop the space theme. Adidas depicted galaxies, planets, black holes and, of course, stars in black and white on twenty hexagons. The conquest of space for residents of the United States is associated with the desire to win. And Questra perfectly conveyed this feeling to football fans.

In 1994, 24 teams participated in the final stage of the FIFA World Cup for the last time. The Championship matches were held in stadiums with a capacity of up to 91,000 spectators, which helped to set absolute attendance records for World Cup matches.

For the first time, not a single goal was scored in the final match of the World Cup. Also, for the first time, the final ended in a draw, and penalty shootouts were used to determine the champion. The Brazilian national team became the champion, beating the Italian national team.

Tricolore

The official ball of the 1998 French World Cup, navali Tricolore, is translated from French as «tricolor». Adidas decided to completely abandon the traditional black and white patterns.

The design is inspired by the traditional symbols of the French Republic and the national team — the tricolor flag and the Gallic rooster. It is noteworthy that the new Adidas logo is used on this ball for the first time, it is stylized under the crest of a rooster.

Adidas prepared a special version of the ball for the final, where the blue elements became brighter, and gold edging appeared on the edges of the panels.

The 1998 World Cup brought many innovations: referees started using electronic scoreboards instead of cards to announce substitutions and time compensations, introduced the «golden ball» rule, banned back steps and allowed three substitutions per match. In the Championship final, the French national team became the champion for the first time, beating Brazil with a score of 0:3.

Fevernova

Fevernova became the official ball of the 2002 World Cup in Japan and South Korea. It was the first Championship hosted by two countries at once. Therefore, the ball had to become special and unite their cultures.

For the first time since 1978, Adidas moved away from the standard design of balls and developed the Fevernova. Three triangles twisted into a turbine-shaped structure reflect the technological innovations of both countries. And red and gold colors are traditionally used in Asian mythology. Red means fire, passion and struggle, and gold means the winner's reward and well—deserved respect.

For the final, Adidas presented a special version of Fevernova. The green elements were replaced by a gold color that extends from the edges to the center, emphasizing the importance and status of the final match.

The Championship matches were held at 20 stadiums in Japan and the Republic of Korea, most of which were built specifically for the World Cup. The national teams of Germany and Brazil met in the final of the championship. The South Americans won with a score of 0:2.

Teamgeist

The official ball of the 2006 World Cup was named Teamgeist. Translated from German, this word means «team spirit». This is the first football ball from Adidas since 1970, which consisted not of 32 panels, but of only 14. So it became waterproof and more controllable in flight, which could make a big difference in the game.

The organizers provided 40 of these balls to each qualifying team. However, during matches they used special balls with information about the stadium, the participants of the meeting, the date and time of each game. In the final, the teams of Italy and France played a special golden version of the ball — Adidas Teamgeist Berlin.

In addition to the basic design of the ball, Adidas released a winter version, where all the white elements have been replaced by bright orange. And in the version for the final match, the accent panels on the ball were made in gold.

The 2006 World Cup was held under the motto "Die Welt zu Gast bei Freunden", which translates as "Time to make friends". The matches were held in 12 German cities from Leipzig to Berlin, where the national teams of France and Italy met in the final. The latter won on penalties.

Jo'bulani

The official ball of the 2010 World Cup was named Jo'bulani. This word fully reflects the emotions of the fans, because it means «celebrate» or «rejoice» in translation from Zulu — the language of one of the nationalities of South Africa.

Jo'bulani is imbued with symbolism. This is the 11th official ball of the FIFA World Cup. It uses 11 colors that represent 11 players on the football team, 11 official languages of South Africa and 11 South African communities. The colorful design of the ball conveyed the diversity of the country in harmonious unity and helped football fans to feel the real African spirit.

Adidas also presented special versions of balls. The winter version is presented in orange and black, and in the final of the Championship the teams played a white and gold version.

In 2010, the FIFA World Cup was held on the African continent for the first time. The teams of Spain and the Netherlands reached the final, where the Spaniards won 1-0, becoming the first European team to win the World Cup outside Europe.

Brazuca

Name for the 2014 World Cup official ball was chosen by voting. In total, more than 1.7 million Brazilians voted, 77% of them decided to call the ball Brazuca. This is an informal word that locals call each other in a friendly way.

The design uses stripes and colors that reflect the Brazilian atmosphere of universal fun and resemble «wish bracelets», which are traditionally worn by residents of sunny Brazil.

Adidas also released a winter version of the ball, in which the white color was replaced by bright orange, and the multi-colored lines became silver. A special version of Brazuca also distinguished the Championship final: like a palette, it merges black, gold and bright green colors.

The 20th anniversary FIFA World Cup was the first tournament to use an automatic goal scoring system. The final of the tournament was held in Rio de Janeiro at the Maracana Stadium. The German national team became the Champion for the fourth time, beating Argentina with a score of 1-0.

Telstar 18

Telstar 18 is official ball of the 2018 World Cup was named after the legendary Adidas Telstar of 1970 — the first black-and-white ball that made watching matches on black-and-white TV screens much more convenient.

In 2018, the football ball highlighted the technological development of the country hosting the championship. Non-standard pixel spots reflected the innovation of Russian technologies, and an NFC chip was added to the ball itself. When fans read the code from the ball with their smartphone, they were directed to a secret website with information about the Telstar 18.

In the final, the teams of France and Croatia played a special version of the ball called Telstar Mechta (Dream). Its design features black pixels transitioning into a bright red color, which replaced the white from the original design.

Russia hosted the World Cup for the first time in its history and immediately set a record: the FIFA council recognized this Championship as the best in history, because it turned out to be the most profitable in the entire existence of the organization. The matches were held in 11 cities in both the European and Asian parts of the country.

Al Rihla 2022

Al Rihla was the official ball of the 2022 FIFA World Cup. Al Rihla means 'journey' in Arabic. The design of the ball, full of mottled colours, symbolized both the Qatari sandstorms and the country's fast-developing technology. Each ball was equipped with internal electronic sensors, allowing detection of its speed and position and providing the referee's video assistant (VAR) with highly accurate data on the ball's movement within seconds.

The very first World Cup in the Middle East, the tournament in Qatar showed unprecedented friendliness and openness of the country to the world and a high-class organisation, which led to impressive record figures of 3.4 million spectators attending the matches and the total audience of the tournament of a more than 5 billion viewers on all platforms and media resources.

The 2022 World Cup also became an incredible success for many countries in the MENA region: Saudi Arabia was the only country to beat future champion Argentina, Tunisia defeated reigning world champion France, and Morocco showed near-miraculous performance and was not only able to win the group stage, but also reached the semifinals to become the first team from the Arab world to make it into the final four of a World Cup.

In the final match of the 2022 World Cup held at the magnificent Lusail Stadium, the largest stadium in Qatar and the Middle East by capacity, Leo Messi led Argentina to a victory over France (3:3, on penalties - 4:2) which made Argentina the world champions for the third time in history.

FIFA Confederations Cup

The FIFA Confederations Cup is a football competition among national teams that FIFA held once in 4 years. The first official tournament took place in 1997, however, it is officially considered that the Cup originated in 1992 in Saudi Arabia where the King Fahd Cup was conducted. The tournament involved 8 teams - the winners of each of the 6 continental championships held by the respective federations, the winner of the World Cup and the host nation of the Confederations Cup. This competition is a kind of rehearsal to the World Cup and since 2005 this competition has been held every 4 years in the World Cup host nation, a year before its start. The tournament lost its relevance for an obvious reason - the biggest starts refused to take part in it for the fear of being injured a short time before the start of the main tournament of the football community. The last final match of the Confederations Cup was played in 2017 in Saint-Petersburg where Germany won over Chile with 1:0 thus gaining the title. Nevertheless, Brazil has become the best team of the tournament having won the Cup 4 times and having made it to the finals 5 times.

FIFA Women's World Cup

The FIFA Women's World Cup is an official international competition involving 24 teams from different countries. The first tournament was held in 1991, 60 years after the first FIFA Men's World Cup. There was a sold reason for that – for many years FIFA believed that women's football matches would not cause any interest among fans and the even would not pay off. The Board of Directors satisfied the demand, having introduced slight modifications in the rules of the game. The 'test' tournament was held in 1988 in China and the FIFA called the idea of conducting Women's World Cup a success.

Olympic Games

Football was first introduced into the Olympic games in 1900 in Paris. Despite this, it became an official kind of sport only in 1908 with the establishment of the International Football Federation. The International Olympic Committee introduced the restrictions for national team players – professionals could not take part in the games, which significantly lowered the tournament rating and with the appearance of the World Cup the interest in the football competition at the Olympics became minimal.

UEFA Champions League

The European Champions' Cup appeared in 1955 upon the proposal by Gabriel Hanot, a sports journalist and editor of «L'Équipe» to determine the strongest club in Europe. The format suggested by the journalist was a playoff competition where each round constated of 2 matches – one home and one away. The same year the UEFA Congress took the decision to hold this competition annually. The tournament got its current name only in 1992 after some novelties had been introduced to the format.

UEFA European Football Championship

This is the second in importance football competition dating back to 1960. The European Football Championship was established by the UEFA Association to determine the champion of the European continent. Originally it was called the European Nations Cup, but in 1968 its name was changed for the current and the tournament acquired its official status. Theestablishment of the European Football Associations Union (UEFA) played a key role in the successful creation of the championship. Henri Delone, the first person to suggest the idea of holding the tournament, became Secretary General of the new association. The cup given to the winner of the competition was named in his honor. However, Delone himself did not live up to the first event, he died in 1955, 5 years before its start. Currently, Germany is the best team on the continent as it has won the cup 3 times and has played in 6 finals. Another important contribution has been made by Cristiano Ronaldo, the top scorer of European championships so far. The Portuguese player has scored 14 goals in these tournaments.

UEFA Europa League

The first match of the UEFA Cup, the predecessor of the Europa League, was played in 1971. The tournament was held until 2008. Until 1998, the owners of national cups did not take part in this competition, since there was a separate one for them, UEFA ECWC, which is considered the second most important after the Champions League. As a result, the two tournaments were merged into one UEFA Cup. In the 2009/2010 season, the format of the Cup was changed by analogy with the Champions League, and it was called the Europa League.

National football leagues and tournaments in England

In the UK football is much more than a national sport. It has so deeply integrated into the daily life of the British that it has become an important element of their culture. Today there are over 140 individual leagues and almost 5300 clubs across the nation.

The English Premier League is the top league of the English championship. It is considered the most popular in the world. English football clubs, such as Manchester United, Arsenal, Chelsea and Liverpool, are among the most successful in the world.

Our collection of English footballs opens with unique Uppies and Downies balls, representing medieval traditions of football. The game is currently played in Workington in West Cumbria, over Easter. Only three hand-made balls are produced every year by official ballmaker Mark Rawlinson, each ball is dated.

National football leagues and tournaments in Italy

Italy's Seria A is the last in the top three strongest football divisions in the world after the English and Spanish leagues. The tournament features the strongest clubs, the best of which make it to the Champions League and Europa League upon the results of the season. The tournament has an unofficial name of 'scudetto' meaning a small patch with Italy's three-color flag worn by Seria A winners. Each 10 titles won allow the club to put a gold star above its logo.

National football leagues and tournaments in France

The French football league may seem more modest than others, however, if you look into the history, it will be clear how much the French have contributed to the development of the sport. Such names as Jules Rimet, the FIFA founder and first president, and Gabriel Hanot, who suggested the creation of the European Champions Cup, are a vivid testimony to it. The top French league ranks close to the Spanish La Liga, English Premier League, Italy's Seria A and German Bundes League.

OF FOOTBALLS

National football leagues and tornaments in Brazil

Brazil is often referred to as the second birthplace of football. It is not by chance that it got this name – every year hundreds of Brazilian players go to different countries to leave their mark on the history of football for years to come. However, even the strongest have their own weaknesses. Brazil is a federation, and this peculiarity affects sport just the same way it affects government. It makes a negative impact on the development of football in the country: the relations between football associations of the states may be rather tense and for a long time the country did not have a national championship.

National football leagues and tornaments in Argentina

The Argentine and football have gone side by side since 1930. Like the British, the Argentinians consider football to be something more than a sport. A huge number of professional teams was the reason why two championships had long existed in the country. The most popular teams are River Plate and Boca Juniors.

National football leagues and tornaments in USA

The USA is only nation in the world where the word 'football' refers to a different game. It is easy to guess that the game is not that popular there, but American patriotism and the desire to be the first in everything is deeply rooted in the mentality. Understanding that US players will not make it through European or Latin American groups, they have found an option in making their female team the strongest on the planet.

National football leagues and tournaments in Saudi Arabia

On the national level, Saudi Arabia is considered one of Asia's most successful national teams, having won the AFC Asian Cup three times (1984, 1988 and 1996), with a record of six Asian Cup finals and it has qualified for the FIFA World Cup on six occasions since debuting at the 1994 tournament.

The Saudi Pro League is the top division of association football in the Saudi Arabian league system. It has been operating as a round-robin tournament from its inaugural season until the 1989–90 season, after that the Saudi Federation decided to merge the football League with the King's Cup in one tournament and the addition of the Golden Box.

The Saudi Pro league is regarded as one of the best football leagues in Asia, hosting several of Asia's biggest and most wildly supported clubs such as Al-Hilal, Al-Ittihad, Al-Nassr, and Al-Ahli. The association is also regularly ranked with the highest coefficient in Asia due to having successful and consistent performances in the AFC Champions League by its clubs.
